

The Standard Electrical Engineering Company

1000 Franklin Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The TABLE.

- | | |
|----------------------------|------------------------|
| A Song upon a Recan- | The Maidens Com- |
| ting Lover. | plaint. |
| The New Droll. | Canary's Coronation. |
| The silly Shepherd. | The Lovers complaint. |
| The Royalists resolve. | Platonick Love. |
| The Contest. | Upon passionate Love. |
| The fendi Amorist. | The Womans Answer. |
| On Women. | I dote, I dote. |
| The satiated Lover. | A Pastoral Song. |
| A Love Riddle. | A Caveat for Maidem. |
| In praise of his Mistress. | The Platonick Lover. |
| A Love Song. | Loves Extasie. |
| A Pastoral Song ; with | The Husband-man and | | the Answer. | Serving-man. |
| A Song in derision of | A merry Medley. |
| his Mistress. | The Resolute Lover. |
| The Dominion of the | A Song in Praise of | | sword. | Canary. |
| The fickle Lover. | The Royalists Answer. |
| The Royalists Corona- | to Nay prithee don't |
| tion. | fie me. |
| A Lovers Request. | The taking of Mardik. |
| The Despairing Lover | The Re-resurrection of |
| to his Mistress. | the Rump. |
| Gather your Rose buds | The Bulls Feather. |
| The Music Courting | The merry Good-fel- |
| Song. | low. |
| The Whifflit Lover. | The Levellers Rant. |
| The Loyal Prisoner. | |

THE

1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9.

THE

LOYAL GARLAND.

SONG. I.

Loyalty turn'd op Trump, or the danger over,
A New Song.

(1.)

I bain ill Men attemp' us,
Their day is out of date,
The Fates do now exempt us
From what we felt of late.
The Nation is grown wiser
Then to believe their sham ;
He that was the deviser
Themselves begin to blame.

(2.)

They thought the Tyrants you'd ever
Lurch on Rebellion,
But Timber Powers deliver
Us from their foolish yule.

The Loyal Garland.

For see they are deceived
And can no more prevail,
Those who the Rump believed Ashamed are of the Tale.

SONG. II.

The kind Shepherd.

Dear Dorinda weep no more,
No more my charming Creaturz grieve
My wandrzings I will now give o're
And in the peaceful shades will live.
With thee my Joys will live and love,
Constant as Nature to its course ;
As constant as the Turtle Dove,
Whose death can only Love divorce.

Thy Sighs no more can Sylvio hear,
Thy pretty Innocence has won
Me all my passion to declare,
Which can be due to you alone.
Joy of my mind, then let us hasten
And joyn our hands as hearts are joyn'd,
No flying moments let us waste
In which we greater Joys may find.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. III.

The Marriage Joy.

(1.)

Joy to the Bridegroom till the Sky
With pleasing sounds of welcome Joy ;
Joy to the Bride may lasting Bliss,
And every day prove like to this.

Joy to the Bride may lasting Bliss,
And every day prove like to this.

(2.)

Never were Marriage Joys divine
But when two constant hearts combine :
He that proves false himself does cheat,
Like sick men tafts but cannot eat.

He that proves false, himself does cheat,
Like sick men tafts, but cannot eat.

(3.)

What is a Maiden-head, Ah ! what,
Of which weak fools so often prize ?
'Tis the young Maidens pride and boast,
Yet ne'er was found but when 'twas lost.
'Tis the young Maidens pride and boast,
Yet ne'er was found but when 'twas lost.

The Loyal Garland.

(4.)

Fill me a glass then to the brink,
And its confusion here I'll drink ;
And he that baulks the health I name
May he dye young and set in shame.
And he that baulks the Health I name
May he dye young and set in shame.

SONG. IV.

The mournful Shepherd.

(1.)

There is a black and fallen hour
That fate decreed our Love shou'd know,
Else we shou'd slight Loves mighty power
Till rapt with the Joys we find below.
Tis past dear Cynthia, now let frowns be gone
A long long Pennance I have done,
A long long Pennance I have done,
For crimes alas to me unknown.

(2.)

In each sad hour of silent night
Your Image in my sight appears,
I grasp the soul of my delight,
Slumber in Joys and wake in Tears.

Ah!

The Loyal Garland.

Ah faithless charming Saint what will you do
Let me not think I am by you,
Let me not think I am by you,
Loved worse, loved worse, for being true.

(3.)

Alas why do you fly my arms,

Think, O ! think, how oft you swore
To please me you would spare no charms
But let me rifle all your store.

But Cynthia now how sullen you do prove,
And frown frown on my tender love,
And frown frown on my tender love,
Whilst nothing your hard heart can move.

SONG. V.

The Loyalists Encouragement. A Song to the Tune of, Now now the Fights done.

(1.)

You Loyalists all now rejoice and be glad,
The day is our own there's no cause to be sad,
The tumult of Faction is crush'd in its pride,
And the grand promoters their muddles all hide,
For fear of a swing which does make it appear,
Though Treason they lov'd, yet soz Hemp they don't care.

(2.) Then

The Loyal Garland.

(2.)

Then let us be bold still and baffle their plots,
That they in the end may prove impotent sots,
And find both their Wit and their Malice defeated,
Say find how themselves and their Pupils
they cheated ;
By heating and thrusting to unhidge a State
Of which Heav'n's guardian which fir'd is by Fate.

(3.)

Though once they the Rabble bewitch'd with their Cant,
Whilst Cobler and Weaver set up for a Saint,
Yet now the stale cheat they can fasten no more,
The juggles discovered and they must give o'er,
Yet give them their due that such mischief did work,
Who revile Christian Princes, and pray for the Turk.

(4.)

O! give them their due, and let none of 'em want
A Cap of Geneva or Turkish Turban,
That clad in their colours they may not deceive
The bulgar too prone, and too apt to believe ;
The fears they suggest on a groundless pretence,
On purpose to make 'em repine at their Prince.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. VI.

The Trouper : A pleasant Song Revived.

(1.)

Come, come, let us drink
Tis vain to think
Like souls of grief or sadness ;
Let out Honey fly,
And our sorrows dye,
All worldly care is madness ;
But Wine and good Cheer
Will in spite of our fear,
Inspire us all with gladness.

(2.)

Let the greedy clowns
That do live like hounds,
That know neither bound nor measure ;
Lament e'ry loss,
For their wealth is their cross,
Whose delight is in their Treasure ;
Whilst we with our own
Do go merrily on,
And spend it at our leisure.

(3.)

Then troul about the bowl
To e'ry Loyal Soul,

Ano

The Loyal Garland.

And to his hand commend it ;
A sig for think,
'Emas made to buy drink,
Before we depart we'l end it :
When we've spent our store
The Nation yields us more,
And mercily we will spend it.

SONG. VII.

The Young Maidens Request to her Mother.

A New Song.

(1.)

O ! Mother, Roger with his kisses
Almost stops my breath I vow ;
Why does he gripe my hand in pieces,
Yet he swears he loves me too.
Tell me Mother, pray now do,
Pray now do, pray now do ;
Tell me Mother, pray now do,
Pray now, pray now, pray now do,
What Roger means when he does so,
For ne'r stir I long to know.

(2.)

He calls me dearest, sets me by him,
Tells me I must be his Joy ;

And

The Loyal Garland.

And what he wants must not deny him

Least I all his peace destroy.

Tell me Mother, &c.

(3.)

By Cheeks he clasps, and Hand he squeezes,
Smiling hugs me o're and o're;
And still his fancy strangely pleases
With what he would fain do more.

Tell me Mother, &c.

(4.)

He tells me Maids were made a Treasure,
For increase and deeds of Love;
And vows I loose a deal of Pleasure
Which he fain wou'd have me prove.

Tell me Mother, &c.

SONG. VIII.

The Answer.

(1.)

I pray now leave your early longing,
Daughter it's not yet your time;
But stay and Lovers will be thronging,
When that you are in your prime.
You the meaning then shall know,
You shall know, you shall know,

You

The Loyal Garland.

You the meaning then shall know,
You shall, you shall, you shall know,
What Roger means when he does so,
When you up to Twenty grow.

(2.)

For Lovers embrace you are too tender,
And young men are often rough ;
that Roger would have you surrender
Five years hence is time enough.
You the meaning then shall know, &c.

SONG. IX.

The Discontented Lover.

A Song to two Voices.

(1.)

Why does the foolish world mistake,
And Lovers dull praises sing so loud ;
that idle Subjects must they make,
Who choose a blind and childish boy their guide.

(2.)

that dearer Joys our freedom brings, whilst the wing'd Faire on e'ry Bough,
Charm'd with our bliss, in Confort sings,
And night and day our harmless pleasure view
Chorus

The Loyal Garland.

Chorus.

'Tis shame and the night loves folly does cover,
And only the Bat and the Screech-Owl that hover
About the dark Windows of a drowsy lover.

SONG. X.

The Loyal Seaman's Delight.

To the Tune of the Cannons Roar, &c.

(1.)

On the rouling Waves we go,
Where the stormy winds do blow,
To quell with fire and sword the foe
That dares give us vexation :
Sailing to each Foreign Shore,
Despising hardships we indure,
Wealth we often do bring o're
That does enrich the Nation.

(2.)

Noble hearted Seamen are,
Those that do no labour spare,
Nor no danger shun or fear
To do their Country pleasure.

The Loyal Garland.

In Loyalty they do abound,
Nothing base in them is found ;
But they bravely stand their ground
In calm and stormy weather.

(3.)

In their love and constancy
None above them e'r can be,
As the Maidens daily see
Who are by Seamen courted ;
Nothing for them is too good
That is found in Land or Flood,
Nor with better flesh and blood
Has any ever spott'd.

SONG. XI.

The Love-sick Maid.

My Life and my Death they are both in your power,
I never was wretched till this cruel hour ;
You tell me 'tis true sometimes that you love,
But alas 'tis unkind for me ever to prove.
And sigh for Alexis thus hourly in vain,
To tell the deaf Rocks and the Woods
my soft pain.

Distract-

The Loyal Garland.

Distractedly jealous through which I do rove
By day and by night in the search of my Love;
Yet unkind he does fly me, and robs me of bliss,
Takes all my kind heart, but gives me none of his.

Yet wou'd he, yet wou'd he return but again,
I'd forgive the cruel Author of all my past pain.

I'd meet my Alexis with unfolded Arms,
And muster to win him the force of my charms.
Smile and delight him with whispers of joy,
Then chide him that he to Aminta is coy :

Who lives but to love him, but if he relief
To my pain does deny, death shall ease my fad grief.

SONG. XII.

Tyranick Love, or the cruel Mistress.

(1.)

Love in phantastick Triumph sat,
Whilst bleeding hearts around him flow'd,
From whose freshy pains he did create,
And strange Tyranick pow'r he shew'd:
From thy bright eyes he took his fires,
Which round about in spozt he hurld,

B

But

The Loyal Garland.

But 'twas from mine he took desires,
Enough to undo the amorous world.

(2.)

From me he took his sighs and tears,
From thee his pride and cruelty,
From me his languishment and fears,
And e'ry killing shaft from thee.
Thus thou and I the god have arm'd
And set him up a Deity ;
But my poor heart alone is harm'd,
Whilst thine the Victor is and free.

SONG. XIII.

Advice to Virgins.

If's use time whilst we may,
Snatch those Joys that hast away.
Earth her wonted Coat may cast,
And renew her Beauties past ;
But our Winter's come, in vain
We sollicit Spring again :
And when our Furrroughs Snow shall cover,
Love may return, but not a Lover.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XIV.

The good Fellows.

VV Hen our Brains well liquo^rd are
Then we charm asleep our care ;
Then we account Machevil a fool with his plots.
And cry ther's no depth but the bottom oth' pots.
Then Hector compar'd with us will be,
But a Coward and Crœsus beggarly :
Then with Songs our Voices we raise,
And circle our Temples with Bays.
Then Honour we account but a blast of wind,
And trample all things in our mind :
The valiant at Arms,
That are lead by fond alarms,
Get their Honour with harms ;
Whil^t he that takes up
A plentiful Cup
To no danger is brought,
But of paying his groat.
Then quickly come Lad, and fill our Cups full,
For since down we must all be laid ;
Tis held a good Rule
In Bacchus's School,
Tis better lye drunke then dead.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XV.

The Country Mans wish.

To the Tune of, As May in all her youthfull dress, &c.

(1.)

L Et Jug in smiles be ever seen,
And kind as when our Loves begun,
And be my Pastures ever green,
And new Crops spring when Harbets done,
My Cattle thrive and still be fat,
And I my wish shall find in that.

(2.)

D let my Table furnish'd be
With good fat Beef and Bacon too,
And nappy Ale be ever free
To strangers that do come and go.
My Yards with Poultry and Swine
Well stok'd, and eke my Ponds with Fish,
My Barns well cram'd with Hay and Graue,
And I shall have my wish in this.

(3.)

Let me in peace and quiet live,
Free from all discontent and strife;

The Loyal Garland,

And know from whom I all receive,
And lead a honyly harmless Life.
Be neat in home spun cloathing clad ;
And still to add to all my Bliss,
My Children train i'th' fear of God :
And this is all on Earth I wish.

SONG. XVI.

A Scotch Song.

Enney shall wees gang away bit,
Thout know what Jocky means by it ;
In gend faith I'se will use yen well,
Ind I'se give yen Curds thy Weem full.
Then stay not, nor delay not
Ganging with thy dear,
Nor say yen cannot, nor yen wonot,
Since by my Bonnet I'se don swere,
I'se don love yen better than any ene ;
And will wadd yen, and badd yen,
If yen will but my dear be mine.

SONG. XVII.

The Answer.

VV Hen Jocky don call Jenny forth,
She won gang with him good troth.

The Loyal Garland.

Ne weather shall divide we tway,
Then I se give my hond myn heart you habu
So come on, and lets gang along,
Nuckle deal wæs hast ;
I se long won till the thing's don,
Nay I se like till the Wadings past.
Then gis yen hond, lats to Kirk a good throng
And yen shall have what yen do crave,
I se warrant I se buckle yen's thong.

SONG. XVIII.

The Witty Lasses Choice.

To the Tune of The Experienced Doctor.

(1.)
G I've me the man that's witty and jolly,
G I hate a fond sop that's conceited with folly,
A man that ingenious is, though he's no mony,
Is welcome to me, and I'l call him my honey.

(2.)

Not wealth nor estate can a Maiden rejoice,
If she does make an unfortunate choice.
If Riches do blind her to take an old man,
The joys she expected are less then a span.

34

(3.) D.

The Loyal Garland.

(3.)

Had for the same she an Idiot does wed,
One that is clownish and never well bred;
What is her Life but an Ocean of trouble,
The joys she expected are less then a bubble.

(4.)

But if young and witty her Lover do prove,
That's wanting in mony, he'll pay her in love;
He credit and joys like a spring will afford,
And please her forever at bed and at board.

SONG. XIX.

On the Times, or the good Subjects wish.

To the Tune of Young Phaon.

God days we see, let us rejoice
In peace and Loyalty,
And still despise the factious noise
Of those that vainly try,
To undermine our happiness
That they may by it get;
Knavery has great increase
When honesty does set.

The Loyal Garland.

But let us baffle all their tricks,
Our King and Country serve,
And may he never thrive that likes
Sedition in reserve.
Then let each in his station rest,
As all good Subjects shou'd,
And he that otherwise designs
May he remain unblest.

May Traytors e'er be deceiv'd,
In all they undertake,
And never by good men believ'd ;
May all the plots they make Fall heavy on themselves, and may
They see themselves undone ;
And never have a happy day
That wou'd their King dethrone.

SONG. XX.

The Sailors Delight.

(i.)

Calm, calm's the day, the storm is o're
That lately roard so loud ;
And we have reach'd the happy shore
Without a broken shrou'd.

The Loyal Garland.

Our Tackle fir'd well was, and true,
To bear the strongest wind;
Our Ship tumultuous waves cut through,
And did safe passage find

(2.)

The Deep in vain has spent its rage,
Lightning and Thunders cease;
Now we have gain'd the weather-gage,
And live in wealth and peace.
Fight on you winds, no more we fear
The danger of a storm;
True Loyalty to'ts port will steer,
Though dangers round her swarm.

SONG. XXI.

The Mothers Advice.

(1.)

As Shepherds holliday, the Nymphs come on,
Damon rouse for shame, let sloath be gone;
Cloris Queen of all the May appears
With Eyes as bright as are unclouded stars;
Lovely in the pride of all her youth,
Arise my Damon then and shake of sloath.

(2.) Meet

The Loyal Garland.

(2.)

Meet the Nymph in her approaching charms
And let not greatness shake her from your Arms.

Meet the opening glories of her prime,
Shepherd be bold, for now it is your time ;
This day once past the times no more your own,
Cloris sweet Cloris is to morrow gone.

(3.)

Then baffle fear, and let her know you love,
Tell her how constant and how just you'll prove.
Bear all your sighs and deep laments along,
And let her see her Eyes have done you wrong.
Tell her to live or dye you are inclin'd,
As you her smiles or frowns your portion find.

(4.)

Nymphs oft are thought severe when they ne'r know,
Their Eyes a dart against our breasts do thow,
And would no doubt if sought to yield a cure,
As soon as ask'd to pains that we indure.
Youths bashful nature is Loves only foe,
Then too her Damon, prithee Damon go.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXII.

The Country pastime.

VV Hat zaist thou Tom, shal's jig it now,
In good troth I' se long to donce ;
Strike up then, and let it go,
And Jone do thou advance.

Hey how we caper now,
Wd' foot my Jo 'tis fine,
No Spanish Don with's Rapier now
Can take such steps as mine.
Come Hobb and Nell about skip,
That those who do us zee
Thus take the in and out Trip,
May think there's none like we.

SONG. XXIII.

The merry meeting.

A Ta merry wake I say,
Where Lads and Lasses meet,
All on an Easter day
There Moll and Will did greet.
D Will said she how is it,
Since you and I last met :

You

The Loyal Garland.

You know how we did kiss it,
The time I'se ne'r forgot.
O! Moll said Will that true is,
I'se know it very well,
But now alas my woe is,
I'se made thy Belly swell.
Tis true quoth Moll but grieve not,
It shall no charges be,
Full twenty shillings I've got,
And Napkins two or three.
A spoon to feed the Bantling,
A Cow to give it Milk,
And wrap it in a Mantlin
I'se will as soft as silk ;
And I'se wo still be proud on't,
And think it like the Father ;
Then grieve not Bill that you a don't,
Or we did it together.
Gramarcy, quo Billey, I find it,
That you are both kind and stout ;
Then lets go, ne'r mind it,
And kiss the other bout.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXIV.

The sorrowful Damsel Comforted, or the tryal of Love.

(1.)

A Sighing in the gloomy shade,
The poor Aminta sat,
Lamenting her as dismal fate ;
Thus thus she turn'd her note.
My Strephon whether fixes my love ;
O ! Why wilt thou be gone ?
Why can you so unkind now prove,
To leave a Maid alone.

(2.)

A Maid that loves her Strephon so,
That she'd no danger shun,
But wou'd the worst of fortune know
Into his Arms to run.
She having breath'd her sorrow forth
Lay down and fell asleep,
When Strephon that well knew her worth
Did softly to her creep.

(3.)

For why he long behind a Tree
Had lain to prove her true ;

And

The Loyal Garland.

And now quite from suspicion free
His Love more earnest grew.
He kist her sleeping Lips full oft,
And eke her panting Breast,
Her snowy hand that was so soft,
And on her Face did feast.

(4.)

The Maid at this awak'd surpris'd
To see her Love so near ;
And on him with her Arms she lez'd,
Crying is't you my dear.
O my kind Stars what have you done
In sending back my Joy :
Yet I must chide that you so long
Did my sweet peace destroy.

(5.)

Alas said he this men must do
To prize a Jewel more ;
There is no way to find it true
But polishing it o're.
Now since I find your Love so just Know you have all my heart ;
When otherwise perhaps mistrust
Had rob'd you of a part.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXV.

The Consideration.

If Wealth a man cou'd keep alive
I'd study only how to thrive :
That having got a mighty mass,
I might bribe the Fates to let me pass.
But since we can't prolong our years,
Why spend we time in needless sighs and tears,
For since destiny
Has decreed us to dye,
And all must pass o're the old ferry ;
Hang Riches and Cares,
Since we han't many years,
We'll have a short Life and a merry.

Time keeps its round and destiny,
Regards not whether we laugh or cry ;
And fortune never does bestow
A look on what we do below.
But Men with equal swiftness run
To play on others, or be play'd upon.
Since we can take no course
For the better or the worse ;
Let none be a Melancholly thinker ;
Let the times the round go
So the Cups do so too,
Be'r blush at the name of drinker.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXVI.

The Female Counsellor.

Consider Maids how short our Blisses
Are, and how they post away :
We tire our selves with empty kisses,
And neglect the sweeter play.
Nature tells us that our making
Was design'd for higher things ;
Let not coyness then be shaking
Joys in Love, whence pleasure springs.

Though the advantages of wooing
Foolish custom has forbid ;
Our eyes may speak and sighs be doing,
Messages our words have bid :
Lets tell our Lovers by our blush
More then our kisses are our due ;
And when our faces warm blood flushes,
We wou'd other Joys pursue.

SONG. XXVII.

Upon defacing of White-hall.

VVV Hat Booker doth prognosticate Concerning Kings or Kingdoms that I thin

The Loyal Garland.

I think my self to be as wise
As some that gazeth on the Skyes:
My skill goes beyond the depth of a Pond,
Or Rivers in the greatest rain,
Wherely I can tell, all things will be well,
When the King enjoys his own again.

2. There's neither Swallow, Dove nor Dade,
Can soar more high, or deeper wade;
Nor shew a reason from the stars,
What causeth Peace or Civil Wars:
The man in the Moon, may wear out his shoo'n
By running after Charles his Wain,
But all's to no end, for the times will not mend
Till the King, &c.

3. Full forty years this Royal Crown
Hath been his Fathers and his own;
And is there any one but he,
That in the same should sharers be?
For who be'ter may, the Scepter sway,
Than he that hath such right to reign?
Then let's hope for a peace, for the Wars will Till the King enjoys, &c. (not cease)

4. Though for a time we see White-hall
With Cobweb-hangings on the wall,

The Loyal Garland.

Instead of gold and silver braise,
Which formerly 'twas wont to have,
With rich perfume in every room,
Delightful to that princely strain,
Which again shall be, when the time you see,
That the King enjoys, &c.

5. Did Walker no predictions lack
In Hammonds bloody Almanack ?
Foretelling things that would ensue,
That all proves right, if lies be true :
But why should not he the pillow forester,
Wherein poor Toby once was tane ?
And also foreknow, to th' Gallows he must go,
When the King enjoys, &c.

6. Then abeunt upon thy hill,
My hope shall cast his Anchor still.
Until I see some peaceful * Dove, * Gen. Mat.
Bring home the Branch I dearly love :
Then will I wait till the waters abate,
Which most disturbs my troubled brain,
Else never rejoice till I hear the voice,
That the King enjoys his own again.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXVIII.

The Loyal Soldier.

V
HEN in the field of Mars we lye,
Amongst those Martial wights,
Who never daunted are to dye.
For King and Countries rights,
As on Belona's God I wait, & her attendant be,
Yet being absent from my mate, I lie in misery

2. WHEN losty winds aloud do blow,
It snoweth, hail, or rain,
And Charon in his boat doth row,
Yet stedfast I'le remain,
And for my shelter in some barn crapp,
Or under some Hedge lye,
Whilst such as do now strong Castles keep,
Knows no such misery.
3. WHEN down in straw we tumbling lye,
With Morpheus charms asleep,
My heavy, sad and mournful eye,
In security so deep,
Then do I dream within my arms
With thee I sporting lye,
Then do I dread, or fear no harms,
Nor feel no misery.

The Loyal Garland.

4. When all my joys are thus compleat,
The Cannons loud do play ;
The Drums alarum strait do beat,
Trumpets sounds, Horse, away,
Awake I then, and nought can find
But death attending me,
And all my joys are vanish't quite,
This is my misery.

5. When hunger oftentimes I feel,
And water cold do drink,
Yet from my Colours I'le not steal,
Nor from my KING will shrink :
No Traytor base shall make me yield,
But for the Cause I'le be :
This is my love, pray Heaven to shield,
And farewell misery.

6. Then to our Arms we straight do lie,
And forthwith march away ;
Few Towns or Cities we come nigh,
Good liquor us deny :
In Lethe deep, our woes we steep,
Our Loves forgotton be,
Amongst the Jovialists we sing
Hang up all misery:

The Loyal Garland.

7. Propositions Fate then be more kind,
Grim death lend me thy dart;
O Sun and Moon, and eke the Wind,
Great Jove take thou our part,
That of these Round-heads and these wars,
An end that we may see,
And thy great name we'll all applaud,
And hang all misery.

SONG. XXIX.

The Soldiers Delight : Made in the late times.

Fair Phydelia tempt no more,
I may not now thy beauty so adore,
Nor offer to thy shrine,
I serve one more divine,
And greater far than you:
Hark, the Trumpet calls away,
We must go lest the foe
Get the field, and win the day.
Then march bravely on,
Charge them in the van,
Our Cause Gods is, though he odds is Ten times ten to one.

The Loyal Garland.

2. Tempt no more I may not yield,
Although thine eyes a kingdom may surprize,
Leave off thy wanton tales,
The High-born Prince of Wales
Is mounted in the field,
Where the Loyal Gentry flock,
Though forlorn, nobly born,
Of a ne're decaying stock :
Cavaliers be bold, ne're let go your hold,
Those that loiters, are by traitors
Peerly bought and sold.

3. Phyl. One kiss more, and so farewell :
Sold. Fie, no more, I prithee fool give o're,
Wilt thou cloud'st thou thus thy beams ?
I see by these extremes,
A woman's Heaven or Hell :
Pray the King may have his own,
That the Queen may be seen,
With her Babes on Englands Throne,
Rally up your men, one shall vanquish ten,
Victory, we come to try our valour once again.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXX.

The Time-server : Or, a Medley.

Rom for a Gamester that plays at all he sees,
Whose fickle fancy fits such times as these ;
One that says Amen to ev'ry factious prayer,
From Hugh Peters Pulpit to St. Peters Chair,
One that doth deifie the croiser and the Crown,
But yet can houze with blades that carouse,
Whilst Pottle pots tumble down, berry down,
One that can comply with Surplice and with Cloak
Yet for his end can Independ
Whilst Presbyterian broke Britains pole.

2. This is the way to trample without trem-
'Tis the Hycophant's only secure, (bling,
Covenants and oaths are badges of dissending,
'Tis the politick pulls down the pure :
To profess and betray, to plunder and pray,
Is the only ready way to be great,
Flattery doth the seat :
He're go, ne're stir, will venture further
Than the greatest Dons in the town,
From a Copper to a Crown.

The Loyal Garland.

3. I am in a temp'rare humor now to think w
How I'm in another humor soz to dr:ink well.
Then fill us up a Beer-bowl boys, that we May dr:ink it merrily,
No knavish Spy shall understand,
For if it should be known,
Listen to one we shall be trappan'd.

4. I'le dr:ink to thee a brace of quarts,
Whose Anagram is call'd True Hearts,
If all were well as I would ha't,
And Brittain cur'd of its tumour,
I should very well like my fate,
And dr:ink my Hack at a cheaper rate,
Without any noise or tumour ;
Oh then I should fix my humour.

5. But since 'tis no such matter, change you
I may cog and flatter so may you ; / hus
Religion is a widgeon, and reason is treason,
And he that hath a Loyal heart may bid the world adieu.

6. We must be like the Scottish man
Who with intent to beat down Schism,
Brought in the Presbyterian,
With Cannon and with Catechism.

The Loyal Garland.

If Beuk won't do't, then Jockey shot,
For the Kirk of Scotland doth command,
And what hath been, since they came in,
I think we have cause to understand,

SONG. XXXI.

The Royalist.

A Song made in the Rebellion.

Say, shut the Gate,
To other quart, saith 'tis not so late
As your thinking;
The stars which you see in the Hemisphere be,
Are but studs in your cheeks by good drinking.
The suns gone to tipple all night in the sea boys,
To morrow he'll blush that he's paler than we on, Drink wine, give him water, (boys,
'Tis sack makes us the boys.

2. Fill up the Glass,
To the next merry Lad let it pass,

Come away wi't:

Let's set foot to foot, & but give our minds to't,
Tis heretical Sir that doth slay wit,
They hang up good faces, lets drink til our noses

Gives

The Loyal Garland.

Gives freedom to speak, what our fancy disposes,
Beneath whose protection now under the rose we

3. Drink off your Bowl,
Twill enrich both your head and your soul
with Canary :

For a Carbuncle's face sables a tedious race,
And the Indies about us we carry :
No Helicon like to the juice of good wine is,
For Phoebus had never had wit that divine is,
Had his face not been bow'd as thine is am mine is.

4. This must go round,
Off with your hats till the pavement be crown'd
with your Bevers,
A red coated face frights a Sergeant and his mace,
While the Constables trembles to shivers.
In state march our faces like some of that quorum,
While the whores do fall down, and the vulgare adore 'em,
And our Poses like Link-boys run shining fore 'em.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXXII.

The Scornful Lover.

Ove thec, good faith not I,
I have something else to do,
as, you must go learn to talk,
e is, before you learn to woo,
ne is y sie, stand off, go too, go too.

Because you are in the fashion,
And newly come to Court,
u think pour Cloaths are Dratoz
To invite us to the sport,
u, we do but jeer you for't.

No look so sweetly youth,
Not fiddle with your Hand,
I know you trim your borrowed locks
To shew your pretty hand, are too young for to command.

Or why so confident,
Because that lately ye,
he brought another Complement Unto our Pedigree,
G by inside seems the worse to me.

The Loyal Garland.

5. See where Sir Swotham goes,
I marry, there's your wit,
He cares not what he says or does,
So Ladies laugh at it,
Who can deny such Lads a bit?

SONG. XXXIII.

The Polititian; Upon an Act for Treason made by the Rebels, &c.

B^t since it was lately enacted high Treas
For a man to speak truth against the head of a State.

Let every wise man make use of his reason
To think what he will, but take heed w
For the Proverb doth learn us, (he pr
He that stayes from the battel sleeps in a wh skin (with 2
And our words are our own, if we keep th
What fools are we then that to prattle do b
Of things that do not concern us?

2. 'Tis no matter to me who ere gets the batt
The Tubs or the Crosses, 'tis all one to m
It neither increaseth my goods nor my cat
A beggar's a beggar, and so he shall be;

With

The Loyal Garland.

unless he turn Traitor,
et misers take courses to hoard up their treas-those bounds have no limits, whose minds have no measure,
time be but quiet, and take a little pleasure,
A little contents my own nature.

But what if the Kingdom returns to one of the Prime ones?

my mind is a Kingdom, and so it shall be, le make it appear, if I had but the time once as happy in one, as they are in three,

If he might but enjoy it :

he that's mounted aloft, is a mark for the fate,

and an envy to every pragmatical pate,

whilst he that is low is safe in his estate,

And the great ones do scorn to annoy him.

I count him no wit that is gifted in rayling
And flurting at those that above him do sit, whilst they do out wit him with whipping and goaling,

his purse and his person must pay for his wit;

But 'tis better to be drinking,

drack were reformed to twelve pence a quart

study for mony to merchandize for't,

with

The Loyal Garland.

With a friend that is willing in mirth
Would sport,
Not a word; but we'd pay it with thine.

5. My petition shall be that Canary be chosen
Without either Custom, or cursed Tax,
That the Wits may have freedom to play
Deeper and deeper,
And not be undone whilst our Moles live bare,
But we'll liquor them, and drench them;
If this were but granted, who would desire

To dub himself one of Apollo's own
And then we will drink whilst our Moles are on fire,
And the quart-pots shall be Buckets to quench them.

SONG. XXXIV.

A Song upon a Recanting Lover.

Sure 'twas a dream, how long, fond have I
Been scolded into captivity?
My Newgate was my want of wit,
I did my self commit, my bonds I knif-

The Loyal Garland.

My own Taylor was, mine only so,
Which did my freedom disallow,
I was a Prisoner, cause I would be so.

It was a fine life I liv'd, when I did dress
my self to court your peevishness ;
When I did at your footstool lye,
Expecting from your eye, to live or dye,
Now frowns or smiles, I care not which I have
For rather than I'll be your slave
I'll court the gods to send me to my grave.

Farewel those charms that did so long be-
Farewel that wanton youthful itch, / Witch,
Farewel that treacherous blinking boy,
Which proffer'd seeming joy for to destroy ;
Farewel those nights of pleasure, and to you,
Which were well known were not a few,
For ever, ever, evermore adieu.

Now I can stand the halleys of your eyes,
In vain are all your batteries,
Nor can that low dissembling style,
Nor that bewitched smile longer beguile :
Nor those heart-traps which you each hour renew,
To all those witch-crafts, and to you,
For ever, evermore I bid adieu.

The Loyal Garland.

5. Now will I shake off those chains, and pro
Opinion built the Goal of Love,
Made all his bonds, gave him his bow,
His broken arrows too which murder so ;
May all those fancies, which as Lovers dream
Were all compos'd to make a Dream,
For some carousing Poets drunken flame.

SONG. XXXV.

The New Droll.

C Dine lets drink, the time invites,
Winter and cold weather,
For to spend away long nights,
And to keep good wits together ;
Better far than Cards and Dice,
Herc's Walls are quaint device,
Made up with Fan and feather.

2 Of strange actions on the Seas,
Why should we be jealous ?
Bring us liquor that will please,
And will make us braver fellows
Than the bold Venetian Fleet,
When the Turks and they do meet
Within their Dardanello's.

The Loyal Garland.

pro. Valentin that famous Colon,
Stand the French mans wonder,
Water they implored to do them,
So to cut their Troops in Sunder,
Turen gave a helpless look,
While the lofty Spaniard took
La Ferta and his plunder.

As for water we disclaim,
Rankinhs adversary,
Once it caus'd the worlds whole frame
In the Deluge to miscarry,
Who that enemy of Joy
Which sought our freedom to destroy
And murther god Canary.

We that drink have no such thoughts,
Black and void of Reason,
We take care to fill our Vaults
With good wine of e'ry season,
And with many a chirping Cup,
We blow one another up,
And that's our only Treason.

Hear the Squibs, and mind the Wells
The fifth of November,
The Parson a sad story tells,

The Loyal Garland.

And with honour doth remember,
How some hot-brain'd Traitor wrought
Plots that would have ruine brought
To King and every Member.

SONG. XXXVI.

The Silly Shepherd.

A silly Shepherd woo'd, but will not
How he might his Mississ favour gain
On a time they met, but will not,
Ever after that he fued in vain :
Blame her not, alas, though she said nay
To him that might, but fled away.

2. Time perpetually is changing,
Every moment alteration brings,
Love and Beauty still estranging,
Women are alas but wanton things.
He that will his Mississ favour gain
Must take her in a merry vain.

3. A woman's fancy's like a Feaver,
Or an Ague that doth come by fits,
Hot and cold, but constant never ;
Even as the pleasant humour hits :

Six

The Loyal Garland.

Sick, and well again; and well and sick,
In love it is a womans trick. O 2

4. Now she will and then she will not,
Put her to the tryal if once she smile :
Dilly youth, thy fortunes spill not,
Lingring labours oft themselves beguile :
He that knocks, and can't get in,
His Pick-lock is not worth a pin.

5. A womans say is nodinal,
Dilly youths of love are sebed so;
Put her to a further tryal,
Happily she'l take it, and say no ;
For it is a trick which women use,
What they love they will refuse.

6. Dilly youth why dost thou dally ?
Having got time and season fit,
Then never stand, sweet, shall I ? shall I ?
For too much commend an after-wit :
For he that will not when he may
When he will, he shall have nay.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XXXVII.

The Royalists Resolve, made in the late
Times, &c.

Come Drawer some wine,
Or we'll pull down the sign,
For we are all Jacobal Compouders:
We'll make the house ring
With Healths to our KING
And confusian light on his Confounders.

2. Since former Committee
Afforded no pity,
Our sorrows in wine we will keep 'um;
They force us to take
Two Marts, but we'll make
A third that we ne're mean to keep 'um.

3. And her't who e're sees
We'll drink on our knees
To the King, may he thirest that repines;
A fig for those Traytors
That look to our waters,
They have nothing to do with our wines.

4. At

The Loyal Garland.

4. And next here's three Bowls
To all gallant Sons
That for the King did, and will venture,
May they flourish when those
That are his and our foes,
Are hang'd and ram'd down to the Center.
5. And may they be found
In ill to abound,
Both with Heaven and the Country's anger,
May they never want Fractions,
Doubts, Fears and Distractions,
Till the Gallows-tree frees them from dan-

SONG. XXXVIII

The Contest.

B eauty and Love once fell at odds,
And thus revil'd each other :
Quoth Love I am one of the gods,
And thou wait st on my Mother ;
Thou hadst no power on man at all
But what I gabs to thee ;
Thou art no longer sweet or fair,
Than men acknowledge me.

The Loyal Garland.

2. A way fond Boy, then Beauty cry'd,
We know that thou art blind in thy Head
And men of nobler parts they stan,
But graces better find out.
'Twas I begot the mortal Sonow, and am I
And kindled man's desires,
I made thy Quiver and thy Bow,
And wings to fan thy fires.
3. Cupid in anger flung away,
And thus to Vulcan pray'd, and so goddyd
That he would tip his shafts with scorn,
To punish his proud Spouse,
So ever since Beauty has been
But courted for an hour,
To love a wif is held a sin,
Gainst Cupid and his Power.

SONG XXXIX.

The fond Amorist.

Tell me no more how fair she is, honest boy
For I ha'v no mind to hear
A story of such distant Bliss,
I never shall come near.

The Loyal Garland.

By sad experience I have found,
That her perfections cause my wound.

2. Nor tell me now how fond I am,
For to tempt my daring fate,
Which never time could triumph in,
But repent too late :
There are some hopes e're long I may,
In silence dote my self away.

3. I ask no pity Love of thou ;
Nor will thy justice blame,
So that thou wilt not envy me,
Nor glory in thy flame,
Which croats my heart when e're it dyes,
In that it falls thy sacrifice.

SONG. XL.

On Women.

Car not, my Genius, to unfold
Why silent thoughts as these ;
Women are born to be control'd,
Receive them as you please :
Their long usurped Monarchy,
Hath made me hate such tyranny.

The Loyal Garland.

2. Let them and their magnetick charms,
As Harbingers before 'em, bring you back
Possess themselves of Cupids arms,
As baits for to aboare him; my last song
I'll ne're commit Idolatry a sumpt of care,
With Subjects born as well as Jason.
3. Their Dity with them must fade,
This cannot be deny'd;
Yet since the pretty things were made
Out of old Adams side:
We'll love them still, but know as thus,
We do't because they're part of us;
And let it then suffice the Elves.
To say we love them as our selves,

SONG. XLI.

The satiated Lover.

You are not Cynthia better pleas'd than I
That you have led the way,
Through this dark night of blind incertainty
And first by weak of day
To freedom now we'll sacrifice dreams past,
'Twas my dull fate to cry goodnight so late.

The Loyal Garland.

2. Perhaps so soon I could not disengage,
Having a greater score:
Some birds will longer hover 'bout the Cage,
Though 'twas their Goal before:
But 'twas not long I mean to sit about
Your ashes, when the fire was quite burns out.
3. But now my Tayloz has my bonds unti'd,
I le hold my hands no more
Up at Lopes Bar, he is condem'nd and try'd
That has been burnt before:
But that heart sickness which you gave, proteas
'Tis selde in that the same plague twice insects.
4. Wreas's that have felt Loves cruel slavery
Are better sortis'd
By this experience than they e're could be
By reason or by pride!
Then blush not that you quench your amazons
Name,
But blush with me, if e're you love again.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XLIL

A Love Riddle.

D
own in a Garden sate my dearest Love,
Her Skin more soft and white than dainty Snow,
More tender-breasted than the harmless Dove,
And far more kind than bleeding Pelican,
I courted her, she rose, and blushing said,
With me was I born to live and dye a Maid.

2. For her I plucks a pretty Marigold,
Whose leaves were shut in with the even.
I spoke to her, Rise up Love, and behold
What pretty riddles this to thee hath shown.
These Leaves shut in, are chaste like Cloister
Sun,
Yet they will open when they see the Sun.

3. What mean you by this Riddle sir, she said
I pray expound it : then I thus began,
Know Maids were made for Men, Man for Maid,

With that she changed colour and lookt wan,
Since you this Riddle Sir, so well have told
Be you my Sun, I'll be your Marigold.

SONG

The Loyal Garland;

SONG. XLIII.

In praise of his Mistress.

If Narcissus foolish boy,
Did on a shadow fix his joy;
Or consume himself in seeing
That which had no life nor being :
If fair Leda loath'd a man,
And yet doted on a swan;
How blest am I that loves a Fair,
In whom the choice of all perfections are !

2. No cloud inhabits where she dwells,
But all the Air perfumed smells,
Where her touches she disposes,
Lillies grow like fragrant roses,
And through every of her veins,
The violet shoots up and resigns,
Which doth perish and decay,
If she but once doth turn her beams away.

3. The pure heat of that chaste fire,
Which shines through all her parts entire,
And doth cheer me with delight,
Those heavenly objects fill my sight ;

Dearest

The Loyal Garland.

Dearest yet forget to kill,
That I may live to serve you still;
That I may kiss that blessed hand
And so a Lovers statue always stand.

4. That I may have the happiness
To hug that tree, and not transgress;
To pluck those flowers whose virtues are
To make me rich, thee only rare,
Or those kindlers of desire
Which do set the world on fire;
And so affright those powers above,
By consuming all consuming Love.

SONG. XLIV.

A Love Song.

Le still my dear, why dost thou rise,
The light that shines comes from thine
The day breaks not, it is my heart,
To think that thee and I must part.
Oh stay, oh stay, oh stay,
Or else our joys will dye,
Or perish in their infancy,

The Loyal Garland.

2. 'Tis true, 'tis day, what if it be,
Wilt thou therefore rise from me ?
Did we lie down because of night,
And shall we rise for fear of night ?

Oh no ; since in darkness we came hither,
With leave of light we'll lie together,

3. Love, let me lie in thy sweet breast,
More sweeter than the Phoenix nest ;
Love caus'd desire by thy sweet charms,
Oh let me lie within Loves arms ;
Oh let, oh let, thy blissful kisses cherish,
Or else my instant joys will perish.

SONG. XLV.

A Pastoral Song : With the Answer.

C Loris since thou art fled away
Amyotas sheep are gone astray ;
And all the joys he took to see
His pretty Lambs run after thee,
They're gone, they're gone, and he alway,
Sings nothing now, but well-a-day, well-a-day.

2. Wh' en broider'd Scrip he us'd to wear,
Neglecter lies, so doth his hair :

The Loyal Garland.

His crook is broke, Dog howling lies,
While he laments with woeful eyes,
O Cloris, Cloris, I deey,
And sorc drame to cry, well-a-day, well-a-day

3. His Dales Pipe wherzon he plays
Wd oft to his sweet Rounelayz,
Is flung away, and not a Swain
Dares pipe or sing upon his plain,
'Tis death to any that shall say,
One word to him but well-a-day, well-a-day

4. The way whereon her vanity set,
In even measure us'd to mæt,
Is broken down ; and no content
Came near Amintas since she went ;
For all that e're I heard him say.
Was Cloris, Cloris, well-a-day, well-a-day

5. Th' ground wheredon she us'd to tread,
We ever since hath laid his head,
Still breathing forth such pining woes,
That not one blade of grass there grows:
O Cloris, Cloris, come away,
And bear Amintas well-a-day, well-a-day

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XLVI.

The Answer.

C Loris, since thou art gone away,
Amyntas Shepherd is fled away,
And all the joys he went to spy
With Babes of thine eye,
Are gone, and she hath nought to say,
But who can help what will away, will away?

2. The Green on which it was her chance
To have her hand first in a dance ;
Among the merry Maidens crew,
How makes her nought but sigh and rue
The time she's had cause to say,
And who can help what will away, will away?

3. The Linen with which she went to deck,
And circle in her whiter neck :
Her Apron lies behind the door,
The string's won't reach now as before,
Which makes her oft cry well-a-day,
But who can help what will away, will away ?

4. He often swore that he would leave me,
None of my heart he could bereave me ;

But

The Loyal Garland.

'But when the sign was in the Tayl,
He knew poor Maiden-flesh was frail,
And laughs now I have night to say,
But who can help what will away, will away?

5. But let the blame upon me lye,
I had no heart him to deny.
Had I another Maiden-head
I'd lose it e're I went to bed :
For what can all the world more say,
Than who can help what will away, will away?

SONG. XLVII.

A Song in derision of his Mistress.

Fine young folly, though you wear
That rare beauty, I do swear,
Yet you ne're came near my heart ;
For we Courtiers learn at school,
Only with your sex to fool,
You are not worth a serious part.

2. When I sigh and kiss your hand,
Cross mine Arms, and wond'ring stand,
Holding Parley with your eye,
Nept to dallie with my desires,

Swear

The Loyal Garland.

Swear the Sun ne're shot surh fires :
All's but a handsome Lye.

When I eye your curled lace,
Gentle Soul, you think your face,
Straight some mother doth commit,
And your Conscience doth begin,
To grow scrup'los of a sin,
When I court to shew my wit.

Therefore, Madam, wear no Cloud,
Nor to chec my love grow proud ;
Nor in trith, I much do doubt
Tis the powder in your hair,
Not your breath perfumes the air,
But your Cloaths that set you out.

Pet for all this truth confess,
And I swear I lov'd in jest :
When I next begin to court,
And protest an amorous flame,
I'll swear I in earnest am ;
Beldam, this is pretty sport.

C

SONG

I

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. XLVIII,

The Dominion of the Sword,

A Song made in the Rebellion, &c.

1. Ay by your pleading,
Law lies a bladding;
Burn all your Studies down, and throw away your reading.

2. Small power the word has,
And can afford us,
Not half so much privilege as the sword does.

3. It fosters your Masters,
It plasters Disasters,
It makes the servants quickly greater than their Masters.

4. It venters, it enters,
It seeks and it centers,
It makes a Prentice free in spite of his Indentures.

9. S.
To
And

10.
Ol. Sa
5. This

The Loyal Garland.

5. It talks of small things,
But it sets up all things,
This matters Money, though Money matters
all things.
6. It is not season,
To talk of reason,
Nor call it Loyalty, when the Sword will have it Treason.
7. It Conquers the Crown too,
The Grave and the Golon too, first it sets up a Presbyter, and then it pulls him down too.
8. This subtle Disaster,
Turns Bonnet to Weaver;
Down goes a Bishop, Sirs, and up starts a Weaver.
9. This makes a Lay-man,
To preach and to pray man,
And makes a Lord of him that was but a Dray-man.
10. Far from the Pulpit,
Mr. Saxby's Pulpit,
This brought an Hebrew Iron-monger to the Pulpit.

The Loyal Garland.

11. Such pitiful things be, as to make us
More happier than Kings be; 17
They get the upper hand of Thimblebee am
Slingsbee. 18

13. No Gospel can guide it, 19
No Law can decide it, 20
In Church or State, till the Sword hath say d it. 21

13. Down goes your Law tricks, 19
Far from the Patricks, 22
Sprung up holy Hewsons Polver, and pull'd down St. Patricks. 23

14. This Sword it prevails too, 24
So highly in Wales too, 25
Shinkin ap Powel swears Cut's plutterer shall die. 26

15. In Scotland this faster,
Did make such disaster, 27
That they sent their mony back for which they sold their Master. 28

16. It batter'd their Gunkirk,
And so it did their Spainkirk, 29
That he is fled, and swears the Devil laboure
Dunkirk. 30

The Loyal Garland.

17. He that can tamer,
Or he that is tamer,
Would be judge'd a fool to put away his power.)

18. Take books and rent 'em, first & second
Who can invent 'em,
Then that the Sword replies, Negatur Argumentum.

19. Your brave Colledge Cutlers, ha'nt none
But stoop to the Sutlers,
There's ne're a Library like to the Cutlers.

20. The blood that was spilt, Sir, ha'nt none hath gain'd all the Gilt, Sir;
Thus have you seen me run my sword up to the Hilt, Sir.

SONG. XLIX.

The fickle Lover.

W^HY should you sweat I am forsown,
Since thine I vow'd to be:
It is already morn,
And 'twas last night I swore to thee
That fond impossibility.

The Loyal Garland.

2. Have I not lov'd thee much and long,
A tedious twelvē hours space?
I must all other Beauties forgo,
And rob thee of a new embracē,
Should I still dote upon thy face.
3. Not but all joys in thy brown hair,
By others may be found,
But I must search the black and fair,
Like skilful Mineralists, that sound
For treasure in a plow'd up ground.
4. Then if when I have lov'd my round,
Thou prov'st the pleasant she,
With spoil of meaner Beauties regal'd,
I laden will return to thee,
Even sated with variety.

SONG. L.

The Jovialists Coronation.

Since it must be so, why then so let it go,
Let the Giddi brain'd times turn round,
Now we have our King, let the Goblets be crown'd
And our Monarchy thus we recover :

Whilſt

The Loyal Garland.

Whilſt the Pottles are weeping,
We'l wrench o'er sad souls
In big belly'd Bowls,
And our sorrows in wine shall lie ſleeping,
And we'l drink till our eyes do run over,
And probe it by reaſon,
It can be no Treafon
To drink, or to ſing
A Mourningal of Healths to our true Crowned King.

2. Let us all stand bare, in the preſence we are,
Let our Noſes like Bonefires ſhine :
Inſtead of the Conduits let Pottles run wine,
To perfect this true Coronation ;
And we that are loyal in drink ſhall be Peers,
For that face that wears Claret,
Can Traytoſs beſie all ;
And out-ſtares the Bozes of our Nation ;
In ſign of Obedience,
Our Daths of Allegiance,
Bar-glasses shall be,
And he that tipples tends to jollity.

3. But if in this Raign, a Halberdly train,
Or a Conſtable chance to rebel,
And would with his twybelis maliciously
ſwell ;

The Loyal Garland.

And against the Kings party raise Arms,
When the Drawers like Peomen o'the Guard,
With Quart-pots,
Shall saddle the Hots,
Till they make 'em both Cuckolds & Fræmen.
And on their wives brat up Alarm :
Thus as the Health passes,
We'l trifle our Glasses,
And count it no sin
To drinke and be loyal, in defence of our King.

SONG. LI.

A Lovers Request.

Since 'tis my fate to be thy slave,
Render such pity you would crave :
Since 'tis my fortune so to be,
To him that courts his destiny.

2. 'Twas those magnetick eyes that drew
My heart away at the first view,
Since then to love it was the womb
Which gave it life; be not the tomb.

3. Should I affeit eril'd delay
Dangers attends a tedious way :

Few

The Loyal Garland.

few are the words that may combine
Our hearts, 'tis only say Thou'rt mine.

Yet if another hath possesst
Those hopes that might have made me blest,
Despisy in thy Doom, and I
By death am freed from misery.

SONG. LII.

The despairing Lover to his Mistress.

Fair Archabella to thine eyes
That paints just blushes on the S^tyes,
Each noble heart shall sacrifice ;
But be not cruel though you may,
When e'r you please to save or slay,
With a frown benight the day.

I do not beg that you shou'd rest
In an infoozed high-way b^reast,
Lodging for each common guest :
But I present a bleeding heart,
That never felt a former smart,
Wounded by Love, nor prickt by Art.

3. And

The Loyal Garland.

3. And if you smile, then I shall live !
But if you frown, a death you give,
For which it were a sin to grieve :
But if it be decreed I fall,
Grant me one Wom, one Wom is all,
That you wou'd me your Martyr call,

SONG. LIII.

Good Advice.

Gather your Rose-buds whilst you may,
For time is still a flying,
And that same Flower which grows to day,
To morrow will be dying.

2. The glorious Lamp of Heaven, the Sun,
The higher he is getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer is to setting,

3. That age is best that is the first,
Whilst youth and blood are warmer :
But being fled, grows worse and worse,
And ill succeeds the former.

4. The

The Loyal Garland.

Then be not coy, but spend your time,
And whilst you may, go marry ;
For having once but lost your prime,
You may for ever tarry.

SONG. LIV.

The Muses Courting Sack.

Farewell my mistress, I'll be gone,
I have friends to wait upon ;
Think you I'll my self confine
To your humours, Lady mine ?
So : your louring looks do say,
Twill be a rainy drinking day,
To the Tavern lets away.

There have I a mistress got,
Cloyster'd in a Pottle-pot :
Plump and bounding, soft and fair,
Bucksom, sweet, and debonair,
And they call her Sack my dear.

Sack with no scornful dread will blast me,
Though upon the bed she cast me,
Yet ne're blush her self to red,
Nor fear the loss of Maiden-head :

And

The Loyal Garland.

And though mute and still she be,
Quicker wits she brings to me
Then I e're could find in thee.

4. Yet if thou wilt take the pain
To be kind yet once again,
And with thy smiles but call me back,
Thou shalt be the Lady Sack.
Oh then try, and you shall see,
What a loving soul I'le be,
When I'm drunk with none but thee.

SONG. L.V.

The Constant Lover.

M^th^t your fair enflaming eye
Make a Lover mourn or cry?
All consenting, not repenting,
At your will to live or dye.

2. Must your fair face, and rare desert,
Keep in awe a Lover's heart?
Yet by praying, and obeying,
In thee I hope to have part.

The Loyal Garland.

3. In excess of joy or pain,
I still labour to attain
Such a measure of Loves treasure,
Never to be poor again.

4. Although I should plainly see
Your disdain would murther me,
It should not fright me, but delight me,
So I might thy Martyr be.

SONG. LVI.

The Loyal Prisoner.

How happy's that Prisoner that conquers
With silence, and ne're on bad fortune complains :
But carelessly plays with Keys on his grates,
And he makes a sweet consort with them and his Chains.
He abhors care in Haste, while his thoughts
are oppress'd,
And he makes his heart float like a Cork in his Breast.
Then since we are all Slaves, and Islanders be,
And our land a large Prison inclos'd with the Sea
We'll

The Loyal Garland.

We'l drink off the Ocean, and set our selves free,
For man is the Worlds Epitomy.

2. Let Tyrants wear purple, deep dy'd in the blood,

If those they have gain their Scepters to sway,

If our Conscience be clear, and our Title be good,
With the rags that hang on us, we are richer than they ;

We'l drink down at night what we beg or can borrow,

And sleep without plotting for more the next morrow.

Then since we are, &c.

3. Let the Usurer watch o're his bags and house,

To keep that from Robbers he rak't from his Debtors ;
Which at midnight cryes thieves at the noise
of a mouse,

And he looks if his Trunks are fast bound to their setters :

When once he is grown rich enough for a
States-plot,

Baff in one hour plunders what three score years
Then since, &c.

The Loyal Garland.

Come Drinker, fill each man a perch of old Sherry.

This drammer shall bid all our senses good night

When old Aristotle was frolick and merry,

By the juice of the grape he stagger'd out-right,

Copernicus once in a drunken fit found

By the course of his brains that the world did turn round.

Then since, &c.

'Tis Sack makes our faces like Comets to Shine,

And gives tincture beyond a complexion mask,

Diogenes fell so in love with his wine,

That when 'twas all out, he dwelt in the cask

And being shut up within a close room,

He dying, requested a Tub for his Tomb.

Then since, &c.

Let him never so privately muster his gold,

His Angels will their intelligence be,

How closely they're press'd in them Can has hold,

And they want the State-souldier to set them
all free;

Let

The Loyal Garland.

Let them pine and be hang'd, we'll merrily sing
Who hath nothing to lose, may cry, God bless the King.

Then since, &c.

SONG. LVII.

The Maidens Complaint.

Vhen Flora had mantled the Meadowes with flowers,
And richly adorned her beautiful bowers,
A maid she late sighing, and often did moan,
Saying, Love hath betray'd her, & left her alone.

2. He spit at the Tyrant that hath me betray'd,
And cast him with falsehood for wronging a maid,
I'll call him blind Archer, and treacherous boy,
Cause he with his engine my love doth annoy.

3. But if he preserueth my heart as he shoulde,
And wounds me not deeper with arrows of gold,
I'll honour his precepts with clapping of hands
And shall be obedient to all his commandes.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LVIII.

Canary's Coronation.

C Dine let's purge our Brains,
From Ale and Grains,
They do smell of Anarchy :
Let's chuse a King,
From whose blood may spring,
Such a sparkling Progeny,
It will be fit, strow mine in it,
Whose flames are bright and clear,
We'll not bind our hands with Day-mens
When as we may be free, (bands,
Why should we drop, or basely steep
So popular Ale or Beer.

I. Who shall be King, how comes the thing,
For the which we all are met ?
Claret is a Prince, that hath long since,
In the Royal Order set :
His face is spread with a warlike red,
And so he loves to see men,
When he bears the sway, his Subjects they Shall be as good as free-men,
But here's the Plot almost forgot,
'Tis too much burnt with Women.

The Loyal Garland.

3. By the River of Rhine is a valiant Vine,
That can all other replenish,
Let's then consent to the Government,
And the Royal Rule of Rhenish :
The German wine will warm the Thine,
And brisk in every vein.
'Twill make the Bride forget to chide,
And call him to't again ;
But that's not all, he is too small,
To be our Sovereign.

4. Let us never think of a noble drink,
But with notes advance on high :
Let's proclaim good Canary's name,
Heaven bless his Majesty,
He is a King in every thing,
Whose nature doth renounce all,
We'll make us skip and nimbly trip,
From Cæling to the Groundsil, Especially when Poets be,
Lords of the Privy-Council.

5. But a Vintner will his Master be,
Here's nothing that can him let,
A Drawer that hath a good palat :
Shall be Squire of the Gimblet ;
The Bar-boys shall be the Pages all ;
A Tavern well prepar'd.

And

The Loyal Garland.

And nothing shall be spar'd
An jovial sort shall be the Court,
Wine-Porters that are fouldiers tall
Be Yeomen of the Guard.

6. But if a Cooper ave, with a red nose set,
In any part of the Town,
The Cooper shall with his Abdryal,
Bear the facpter of the Crown.
Young wits that wash away their Cash
In Wine and Recreation,
Who hates Ale and Beer shall be welcome here
To give their approbation,
So shall all you, that will allow Canary's Coronation.

S O N G. LIX.

The Lovers Complaint.

Tell me ye wandering spirits of the air,
Did you e're see a Nymph more bright, more fair
Than beauties darling, & her parts most sweet
Then stole content ; if such alone you meet,
Wait on her early wheresoe'er she flies,
And cry, and cry, Amyntas for her absence dyes.

The Loyal Gallant.

2. But stay a while, I have inform'd you ill,
Where she on earth, she had been with me still:
Fly, fly to Heaven, examine every Sphere,
And see what Star is lately fixed there;
If any brighter than the Sun you see,
Fall down, fall down and worship, that is she.

3. Go search the valleys, pluck up every Rose,
And you shall find a scent of her in those;
Go fish for Pearl & coral, there you shall see How oriental all her colours be:
Then call the Echo to your aid and cry,
Cloris, Cloris, assist, or else I die.

SONG. LX.

Platonick Love.

Fond Lovers what do you mean,
To Court an idle folly?
Platonick Love is nothing else
But merely Melancholly;
Tis active Love that makes us jolly.

2. To dote upon a face,
Or court a sparkling eye;

The Loyal Garland.

Or to believe a dimpled chin,

Compleat felicity,

'Tis to betray your liberty.

3. She cares not for your sighs,

Her your lamenting eyes,

She hates to hear a scold complain,

And cry, he dyes, he dyes,

Believe she loves a close surprise.

4. Then be no more so fond,

As to think a woman can

Be satisfied with Complements,

The frothy part of a man,

Dh no, She hates a Puritan.

5. Then venture to embrace,

'Tis but one squeak or two,

I'm confident no woman lives,

But sometimes she will do,

The fault lies not in her but you.

F 3 SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

With Coloured & variegated Letters

SONG, EXPLAINED

BY JAMES GARDEN OF GLASGOW.

Upon passionate Love.

NO man loves fiery passion can approve,
As either yielding pleasure or promotion,
I like a mild and like-warm heat in love,
Although I do not like it in devotion!

2. Besides, man need not love unless he please,
No destiny can force mans disposition,
How then can any bye of that disease,
When as himself may be his own physician?

3. Some one perhaps in long consumption dy'd
And after falling into love may dye!
But I dare lay my life he ne're had dy'd
Had he been healthy at the heart, as I.

4. Some others rather than incur the slander
Of false Apostates, may true martyrs prove:
But I am neither Iphis nor Leander,
Ne either hang nor drown my self for love.

5. Yet I have been a Lover by report,
And I have dy'd for love, as others do,

But

The Loyal Garland.

But prais'd be Jove, it was in such a sort,
That I reviv'd within one hour or two.

6. Thus have I lov'd, thus have I liv'd till now,
And know no reason to repent me yet,
And he that any otherwise shall do,
His Courage is no better than his wit.

SONG. LXII.

The Womans Answer.

N O man loves fiery passion can resist
That either values pleasure or promotion.
I hate luke-warmness in an Amorist,
It is as bad in love, as in devotion.

2. You that pretend to have a love-proof heart
And dare despise the sacred power of Love,
May know that more has fain by Cupids dart,
Than by the dreadfull thunder-bolts of Jove.

3. Nor can you love, or not love, as you please,
For Cupids laws commands the disposition :
And I have known one dye of that disease,
Whereto himself to others was Physitian.

The Loyal Garland.

4. For when the little God doth shoot his darts
From the bright eyes of women that are fair,
The strokes are fatal, & will wound the hearts
Of men as healthful as you think you are.

5. Those that thus dye for love, incur no slander,
But with loves holy martyrdome are crownd;
Perhaps you cannot imitate Leander,
For every man was not born to be drownd.

6. You say you've been a Lover by report,
But never yet deser'd so good a name,
Ye never lov'd indeed, loves but a sport,
It is ill jesting with a sacred flame.

7. Long may you live unlov'd, & when you dye
Women upon your loathed grave shall spit,
Till then all Gentlemen shall swear you lie,
To try your courage, as you did your wit.

S O N G . L X I I I .

An Excellent Song.

I Dote, I dote, but am a fool to show it,
I was a very fool to let her know it;

The Loyal Garland.

For now she doth so running grow,
She proves a friend worse than a foe,
She'll neither hold me fast, nor let me go:
For she tells me I cannot forsake her,
Then straight I endeavour to leave her,
For to make me to stay,
Throws a kiss in my way,
Oh then I could tarry for e'er.

Then I retire, salute, and sit down by her.
Thus do I cry in frost, and freeze in fire,
Then Nectar from her lips I sup,
Although I cannot drinck all up,
Yet I am foyt with kissing of the Cup;
for her lips are two brimmers of Claret,
Where first I began to miscarry.

Her Breasts of Delight,
Are two Bottles of white,
And her eyes are two Cups of Canary.

Drunk as I live, dead drunk without reprieve
And all my secrets drebblic through a sieve,
Upon my neck her Arms she layeth,
Then all is Gospel that she saith,
Which I laid hold on with my fuddled faith:
For I find a fond Lover's a drunckard,

And

The Loyal Garland.

And dangerous is when he flies out ;
With Lips and with Hips,
Black eyes and white thighs,
Blind Cupid surest tipted his eyes out.

4. She bids me rise, tells me I must be
Like her, for she is not in love she cryes ;
Then do I fume, and fret, and throw,
Though I be fetter'd to my foe,
When I begin to run, but cannot go :
But prither sweet, use me more kindly,
'Tis better to hold me more fast ;
If you e're disengage,
The Bird from the Cage,
Believe me, he'll leave you at last.

5. Like hot I sit, that us'd to fill the Town with Wit,
But I confess I have most need of it,
I have been drunk with Duck and Deer,
Above a quarter of a year,
Beyond the cure of sleeping, or small Beer,
I think I can number the montes too,
July, August, September, October.
Thus runs the Account,
A mischief light on't,
Sure I shall go home when I'm sober.

The Loyal Garland.

My legs are lame'd, my courage is quite faint'd
My heart and body too, are much enflam'd :
By experience I can prove,
Sweat by all the Gods above
It is better to be drunk with wine than Love.
Dack makes us merry and witty,
Foreheads with Jewels adorning,
Although I do grope,
Yet there is some hope
That I shall be sober next morning.

Now with command, she throws me from her band,
She bids me go, yet knows I cannot stand,
Measure all the ground by steps,
As ever hot so drunk with Lips :
ever man so over-seen in Lips ?
May Madam Fickle be faithful,
And leave off your damnable dodging,
Either love me or leave me,
And do not deceive me,
But let me go home to my Lodging.

I have too much, and yet my folly's sotch,
cannot leave, but must have to'ther touch,
There's a Health to the King : how now ?
I'm drunk, and shall speak treason I vow,

But

The Loyal Garland.

But Lovers and fools may say any thing know ;
For I fear I have tired your patience,
But I'm sorry : 'tis I have the woe ! on't.
 My wit hath bereft me,
 And all that is left me,
Is but enough to make a song on't,
 My Mistress and I
 Shall never comply,
And that is the short and the long on't.

SONG. LXIV.

A Pastoral Song betwixt a Shepherd and a Shepherdess.

Q. D Do you not once Lucinda vow,
You would love none but me ?

A. I but my Mother tells me now,
 I must love wealth, not thee.

Shep. Cruel, thy love lies in thy power,
 Though Fate to me's unkind :

Maid. Consider but how small thy Dower
 Is in respect of mine ;

Shep. Is it because my sheep are poor,
 Or that my flock are few ?

The Loyal Garland.

No, but I cannot love at all
I do mean a thing as you.
Ah me, Ah me, mock you my grief?
I pity thy hard fate.
Pity soz Love's but poor relief,
I'le rather choose your hate.
Content thy self, Shepherd a while,
I'le love thee by this Kiss,
Thou shalt have no more cause to mourn
Than thou canst take in this.
Bear record then you Powers above,
And all those Holy Bands:
For it appears the truest Love,
Springs not from Wealth nor Lands.

SONG. LXV.

A Caveat.

Ake heed fair Cloris, how you came
With your disdain, Amyntas flame, noble heart, if once deny'd,
falls into such a height of pride,
I will rather burst, than deign to be,
worshipper of Cruelty.

The Loyal Garland.

2. You may use common Shepherds so,
My sighs to thorns will quickly grow.
And set such scars upon your pride,
Will blast all I have magnifi'd,
You are not fair, if love you lack,
Ingratitude makes all things black.

3. Oh do not soz a flock of sheep,
A golden shore whereon you sleep,
Soz for the Tales ambition tells,
Forsake the house where honour dwells :
In Damon's Palace you'll ne're shine
So bright, as in these arms of mine.

SONG. LXVI.

The Platonick Lover.

SHe's not the fairest of her name,
And yet she conquers more than all here,
But she hath other motives to inflame
besides her lovely face,
As wit and constancy,
And charms that take the soul more than the eye,
'Tis no easie Lover knows how to discover divinity.

The Loyal Garland.

And yet she is an easie Book,
Written in plain language for the meaner tately garb, and a gracions look, (wit
With all things justly fit,
But age will undermine
That glazious outside which appears so fine,
When the common Lover shrinks and gibes her over,
Then she's only mine.

To the Platonick that applies
His clear addresses only to the mind,
The Body but a Temple signifies
Wherein the Saints inshrin'd :
To him it is all one,
Whether the walls be Mable, or of stone,
By in holy places which old time defaces,
But Devotion's shown.

SONG. LXVII.

Loves Extasie.

Ow I confess I am in Love,
Although I thought I never shoul'd,
Tis with one sent from above,
Whom Nature fram'd of finer mould,

The Loyal Garland.

So good, so rare, so all divine,
I'd quit the world to make her mine.

2. Have you not seen the Stars retreat,
When Sol salutes the Hemisphere,
So thinks the Beauties called great
When sweet Rosella doth appear:
Were she as other Women are,
I should not court her with despair.

3. But I could never bear a mind,
Willing to stoop to common faces,
Nor confidence enough could find
To aim at one so full of graces,
Fortune and Nature did agree,
No woman should be fit for me.

SONG. LXVIII.

The Husband-man and Serving-man.

V^ELL met my friend, upon the high-way
Walking on,
So sad all alone,
I pray you tell to me of what science you be,
Or are you a serving-man?

The Loyal Garland.

2. Oh my brother dear, why dost thou inquire
Any such thing at my hand? I will not fain but chal tell thee plain,
I am a plain Husband-man.
3. If a Husband-man you be, if you will go with You shall find alteration then, (me)
For I will bring you in a very short time,
Where you may be a Serv'ing-man.
4. Good Sir, che give you thanks for your great diligence,
Zimble though here I do stand:
But yet I do mean with my plough & my team
Still to be a Husband-man.
5. We have pleasure like a King, we ride a Hunting,
With our goodly Greyhounds many a one,
Our horns all arow, their measures for to bide,
Oh 'tis pleasure for a Serv'ing-man.
6. We have pleasure moze than that
To see our Oxen bat,
Not under their loads for to stand,
But to labour and take pain,
To bring in our gain,
Oh 'tis pleasure for a Husband-man.

The Loyal Garland.

7. A Serving-man both eat,
The best meat that he can get,
His Pig, Goose, Capon, and his Swine,
Thereto his Pasties fine,
With Hack and Claret-wine,
Oh 'tis Diet for a Serving-man.
8. As for Pig, Goose and Capon,
Give me good Beef and Bacon,
With Butter and Cheese among,
And in a Country House
Mat Pudding and Soupe,
That's Diet for a Husbanding-man.
9. A Serving-mans behaviour,
Brings him into labour,
When he walks his Masters Table upon :
There is never a Knight nor Squire
That lives in all the Shire,
But he must have a Serving-man.
10. If a Serving-man you were,
When need you not to care
For tilling or ploughing of your land ;
For then you may go gay,
And wear brave array,
Oh 'tis habit for the Serving-man.

The Loyal Garland.

11. As for your gay Kapparel,
Sir, this is not quarrel,
What you and I do stand upon?
But fain would I know,
If that thou canst me shew,
What pleasure bath a Serving-man?

12. A Serving-mans pleasure
Is without his measure,
When the Hawk is his fist upon,
To see what haste he will make,
His game for to take,
Oh 'tis pleasure for a Serving-man.

13. We have pleasure also,
To see our Corn grow,
And prosper the land upon,
And to get it in our Barns,
Free from any harms,
Oh 'tis pleasure for a Husbanding-man.

14. Indeed sir, it were bad,
If none were to be had,
To tend the Table upon,
But there's neitheir Emperour nor King,
Nor any living,
Can live without the Husbanding-man.

The Loyal Garland.

15. Indeed I must confess,
And grant you no less,
And give you the upper hand,
Your labour is painful,
But yet it is gainful,
I would I were a Husbanding-man.

15. Then let us all,
Both great and small,
Pray for the peace of old England,
And that we may ever
Do our endeavour,
Still to maintain the Husband-man.

SONG. LXIX.

A Merry Medley.

First Ayr.

The Jews Corant.

Le't's call and drink the Cellar w^y,
There's nothing sober underneath the sky,
The greatest Kingdoms in confusion lye,
Since all the world grows mad, why may not I.
w^y

The Loyal Garland.

My Father's dead and I am free,
He left no children in the world but me,
The Devil drunke him downe with usury
And I'le repine in liberallitie,
When first the English war began,
He was precisely a politick man,
That gain'd his state by sequestration,
Till Oliver begun (run
To come with sword in hand and put him to the Then jovial Lads who are undone.
Ho by the Father, come home to the Son
Whom Wine and Musick now do wait upon,
let's tipple up a fun,
And drinck your woes away, jolly hearts come on, come on.

SONG. LXX.

The Second Ayr.

Come hither my own sweet Duck.

VVV's aw be merry and jolly,
Quaff, carouse and reel,
Wee's play with Peggy and Molly,
Dance, and kiss, and set,

The Loyal Garland.

Will's put up the Bag-pipe and Organ,
And make the Welsh Harp to play,
Will Mauris ap Shon ap Morgan
Fisk as on St. Taffies day.

Hold up Jinny,
Piper come play us a spring;
All you that have Musick in ye
Fipple, dance and sing.

SONG. LXXI.

Third Ayr.

French Tricatoes.

Let de French Monsieur come and swear,
Begar Monsieur,
Dis is de ting bee long to hear,
So many a year.
Dancing will be lookt upon,
Now de man of Pran is gone,
We glad his dancing days be done :
With de flower-de-luces grows,
With de English Crown and Rose,
Dats very good as we suppose,
De French can live without de nose.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXII.

Fourth Ayr.

A New Country Dance.

No Drayman shall with his dull fist appear
Lord in the Common-weal,
Or Jesuit in the Pulpit appear,
Under a Cloak of zeal :
Musician never be noted
For wandering men of easse,
But they shall be finely coated
And permitted to sing what they please,
If all things do but hit well
Who knows but so't may be,
Though now you be very zealous,
Then you'll laugh and be merry as we,

SONG. LXXIII.

The Resolute Lovet.

Little Love serves my turn
'Tis so inflaming,
Rather than I will burn,
I'll give o're garning ;

The Loyal Garland.

For when I think upon't,
 Oh 'tis so painful,
'Cause Ladies have a trick
 To be disdainful.

2. Beauty shall court it self,
 'Tis not worth speaking ;
He no more am'rous pelf,
 No more heart-breaking ;
Those that ne're felt the smart,
 Let them go try it,
I havr redeem'd my heart,
 Now I desir it.

SONG. LXXIV.

A Song in praise of Canary.

1. Listen I pray, to the words I've to say,
 In memory firm and certain,
Rich wine doth us raise, to the honor of the bays,
 Quod non facere desertum.

2. Of all the juice, that the gods do produce,
 Hock shall be preferred before 'um ;
It's Hock that shall create us all,
 Mars, Bacchus, Apollo, Virorum.

3. We

The Loyal Garland.

1. Callē abandon Ale, and Beer that is stale,
Rosa solis, and damnable Hum;
But we will crack, in the praise of Sack,
Against Omne quod exit in um.

2. This is the wine in former time,
Each biseſt of the Magi,
Was wort to carouze, and frolickly bouze,
Recubans sub tegmine fagi.

3. Let the hop be their bain, and the Por be their pain,
Let the Gout and the Collick pine 'num,
That offer to shrink from taking this Drinck,
Seu Græcum, sive Latinum.

4. Let the Glass go round, let the Quart pot sound,
Let each man do as he's done to ;
Avant you that hug, the abominable Jogg,
'Mongst us, Heteroclita sunt.

5. Sack's only divine, Beer's drass for a stink,
There's no such mud as Ale is ;
In which they that wallow, a dunc take their swallow ;
Sunt Talpa Dama Capalis.

8. There's

The Loyal Garland.

8. There's no such disease, as he that doth please
With Ale and Beer for to shame us :
Its Sack makes us sing, Hi-ding, a-ding, ding, Musa Apollo majora Canamus.

9. When I've Sack in my brain, I'm in merry vain.
And this my only bliss is :
He that is most wise I can him despise,
Mecum consertur Ulysses.

10. How it clears the brain : how it warms
the vein,
How against all crosses it arms us :
How it makes him that's poor courageous & gay,
Et mutatas dicere formas.

11. Give me my boy, my delight, and my joy,
To the Lad that never drinks Ale,
By Sack he that claps us, into our Syntaxis,
Est verbum personale.

12. Art thou sick or lame, or are thy wits in blame ?
Call for Sack, and thou shalt have it :
Then do not rise, but be very wise,
Cui una natura negabit.

The Loyal Garland.

We have merry-go-downs, we have jow vial rounds, yet nothing comes at random ;
when you come to pay, do you think away,
Id est commune notandum.

He that drinks still and ne're has his fill,
Has a passage like a Conduit,
Still doth aspire, his rapture's on fire,
Si Æthera Æthera fundit.

I have told you plain, and I tell you again
Be he as mad as Orlando,
He is but an Ass : and so let him pass,
Nisi bibit ostia stando,

SONG. LXV.

The Royalists Answer to, Nay prithee
don't fly me.

I have reason to fly thee,
And not sit down by thee ;
for I hate to behold,
One so saucy and bold,
To deride and contemn his supercious,
Our Madams and Lords,

And

The Loyal Garland.

And such unmannly words,
With the gestures that be Fit for every degree,
Are things that we and you
Both claim as our due

From all those that are our Inferiors,
For from the beginning there were Princes
we know,
'Twas you Levellers hate 'em, 'cause you can't be so.

2. All Titles of Honours
Were at the first in the Donors,
But being granted away
With the Grantees stay,

If he wear a small soul or bigger.
There's a necessity
That there should be degree ;
Where 'tis due we'll afford
A Sir John, and my Lord,
Though Dick, Tom, and Jack,
Will serve you and your Pack,

Honest Dick's name enough for a Digger;
He that has a strong Purse can all things say or do,

He is valiant and wise, and religious too.

The Loyal Garland.

We have cause to adore,
That man that has store,
Though a Boze or a Bot
There's something to be got ;
Though he be neither honest nor witty,
Take him high, let him rule,
He'll be playing the fool,
And transgress, then we'll squeeze him for Fines and for Fees,
And so we shall gain
By the wants of his Brain,
Tis the Fools-cap that maintains the City.
Honour be air, 'tis in common, and as fit,
For the fool and the clown, as for the champion
Or the wit.

Then why mayn't we be
Of different degree ?
And each man aspire
To be greater and higher,
Than his wiser or honester Brother ?
Since Fortune and Nature
Their favours do scatter ;
This hath valour, that wit,
Other wealth, nor is't fit,
That one should have all,
For then what would befal
Vim that's born nor to one nor to'ther ?
Though

The Loyal Garland.

Though honour were a prize at first, now 't a chattel,
And as marchantable grown as your wares your cattle.

5. Yet in this we agree,
To live quiet and free,
To drink Sack and submit,
And not shew your wit

By our prating, but silence and thinking
Let the Politick Jests,
Read Diurnals and News,
And have their discourse,
With a Comment that's worse,
That which pleaseth me best
Is a Song or a Jest,

And my obedience lie shew by my drinking.
He that drinks well, does sleep well, he that sleeps well doth think well,
He that drinks well, doth do well, he that does well, must drink well.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXVI.

On the taking of Mardike.

When first Mardike was made a prey,
'Twas Courage that carry'd the Town away,
Then do not lose your valoured page,
gazing on your Mistress Eyes :
But put off your Petticoat-parley,
Potting, and setting,
And laughing, and quaffing Canary,
Will make a good Soldier miscarry,
And never travel for true renown ;
Then turn to your Martial Mistress,
Sir Minerva the Soldiers sister is,
Hallying and Hallying,
With gashing and flashing of wounds, Sir,
With turning and burning of Towns, Sir,
Is a high step to a States-mans throne.

Let bold Belona's Brewer frown,
His Tun shall over-flow the Town ;
To give the Cobler sword and fate.
N Not a Tinker may trappan the State,
With fortunate foes as these be,
Turn'd the Crown to a Cross at Naseby,
Father

The Loyal Garland.

Father and Mother,
And Sister and Brother confounded,
And many good Families wounded
By a terrible turne of Fate;
He that can Kill a man,
Thunder and plunder precisely;
This is the man that doth wisely,
And may climb to a Chear of State.

3. It is the Sword both order all,
Makes Peasants rise, and Princes fall;
All Syllogisms in vain are spilt,
No Logick like a Basket-hilt,
It handles 'em joyn't by joyn't, sir,
Spilling and drilling,
And spilling, and killing profoundly,
T'ntil the disputers o'th ground lye,
And have never a word to say,
Unless it be Quarter, Quarter,
Truth is confuted by a Carter,
By stripping, and nipping,
And tipping, and quipping evasions,
Doth conquer a power of persuasions,
Aristotle hath lost the day.

4. The Musket gives St. Paul the lurch,
And beats the Cannons from the Church,

The Loyal Garland.

The Priests Episcopal Gown too,
And the Organ hath lost his sound too,
Tantara, Tantara, the Trumpet
Has blown away Babylons trumpet;
Now divinity gins to crack:

The Counsellours are struckt dumb too,
By the parchment upon the Drum too,
Dub-a-dub, Dub-a-dub,
Dub-a-dub, Dub-a-dub an alarum,
Each Corporal now can out bare him,
Learney Littleton goes to rack.

5. Then since our swords so bright do shine,
We'll have our wenchies and our wine,
And follow Mars where e're he runs,
And turn our pipes and pots to guns,
The bottles shall be the Granadoes,
We'll bounce about the bravadoes,

By huffing and puffing,
And snuffing, and knuffing the Spaniard,
Whose brows has been by'd in a Can-yard:
Well got same is a Warriors wife:
The Drawer shall be the Drummer,
We'll be Colonels all next Summer,

By hiltng and tilting,
And poynting and joynting,
Like brave boys,
We shall have gold or a grave boy,
And there is an end of a Soldiers life.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXVII.

The Re-Resurrection of the RUMP: or,
Rebellion and Tyranny revived.

To the Turn of the Blacksmith.

I If none be offended with the stent,
Though I foul my mouth, I'll be content,
To sing of the Rump of a Parliament,
which no body can deny.

2. I have sometimes fed on a Rump in foleys,
And a man may imagine the Rump of a Lamb,
But till now has we're heard of the Rump of a House,
which, &c.

3. There's a rump of best, if the rump of a goat,
And a rump whose neck was hang'd in a noose,
But only is a Rump can play fast and loose.
which, &c.

4. A rump had Jane Shore, a Rump Mellaecth,
And a Rump had Antooies griddle Dineh:
But such a Rump as ours is, never was seen,
which, &c.

5. Two

The Loyal Garland.

5. Two short years together the English have scarce

Bien aid of the rampant Rose (Die Mars)
But now thou hast got a prodigious Arse,
which, &c.

6. When the parts of the body did all fall out, some votes it is like did pass for the Knout;
But that the Rump should be King was never a doubt,

which, &c.

7. A Cat has a Rump, & a Cat has nine lives,
But when her heads off, her rump never strives,
But our Rump from the grave hath made two Retribes,

which, &c.

8. That the Rump may all their enemies quail,
They box'd in the Devils Coat of Mail,
And all to defend their Estate in Mail,
which, &c.

But though their scale now seem to be th'upper
There's no need of the charge of a Thanksgiving supper, (Crupper for if they be the Rump, the Army's their
which, &c.

The Loyal Garland.

10. There is a saying belongs to the Rump,
Which is good although it be worn to the stump
That on the Bullock He give thee a thump.
which, &c.

11. There's a Proverb in which the Rump claims a part,
Which hath in it more of sense than of Art,
That for all you can do I care not a fart,
which, &c.

12. There's another Proverb gives the Rump for his Crest,
But Alderman Atkins made it a Jest,
That of all kind of Lucks, Chitten Luck is the best,
which, &c.

13. There's another Proverb that never will fail, in
That the good the Rump will do when they pit
Is to give us a fflop with a ffeytail, (vail,
which, &c.

14. There is a saying which is made by no soul,
I never can hear on't but my heart it cools,
That the Rump will spend all we have in clost which, &c. (stocks)

15. There'

The Loyal Garland.

15. There's an observation wise & deep, (weep, which without an Onion will make me to that flies will blow maggots in the rump of which, &c. (a Shap,

16. And some that can see the wood from the trees,

Say, this sanctif'd Rump in time we may lese
For the Cooks do challenge the Rumps for their fees,

which, &c.

(mone,

17. When the Rump doth sit wee'l make it our
That a Reason be 'nacted if there be not one,
why a fart hath a tongue, & a fust hath none,
which, &c.

18. And whilst within the walls they lurk,
To satisfie us will be a good work,
who hath most religion, the rump or the Turk,
which, &c.

19. A Rump's a Fag-end, like the baulk of a furrow,
And is to the whole like the jail to the Burrough
Tis the bran which is left when the Speal is run thorough,
which, &c.

The Loyal Garland.

20. Consider the world, the beaten is the best on t,

The earth is the middle, & we men are fell on it;
But hell is the Rump, and no more can be said on't;
which no body can deny.

SONG. LXXVIII.

The Bull's Feather.

I chanc't not long ago, as I was walking,
And echo did bring me to where two were talking,

I was a man laid to his wife, dye han I rather Than to be cōmited, & wear the Bull's feather.

2. Then presently she reply'd, Sweet art thou jealous?

Thou canst not play Vulcan before I play
Venus,

Thy fancies are foolish, such follies to gather:
There's many an honest man has worn the Bull's feather.

3. Though

The Loyal Garland.

3. With such it to be toldde, let no man it scorn,
Though it be a nōo feather made of an old horn;
For the discontent it in heart or mind either,
Spay be the moxe subject to wear the Bulls feather.

4. We saw lives discontent, or in despair,
And sear eth false measure, because his wifes fair
This thoughts are inconstant, much like winter- weather,
Though one or two want it, he shall have a feather.

5. Bulls feathers are common as Ergo in schools
And only contemned by those that are fools :
Wilt you should a Bulls feather cause any unrest, Since neighbours far; always is counted the bett :

6. Whose women wh'are fairest, are likely'lt
to give it ;
And Husbands that have them, are apt to believe it,
Some men though their wives should seem too to tear,
They should play the kind neighbour, and give the Bulls feather.

The Loyal Garland.

7. Why should we regime that our swines are so kind, and to hit men need no hand?
Since we that are husbands, are of the same mind? Shall we give them feathers, and think to go free?

Believe it, believe it, that hardly will be.

8. For he that disdains my Bull's feather to day,
May light of a Lass that will play him soul play;
There's ne're a proud Gallant that treads on Cows leather, But he may be coyned, and wear the Bull's feather.

9. Though Beer of that brewing I never drunke,
Yet be not displeas'd if I speak what I think,
Scarce ten in a hundred, believe it, believe it,
But either they'll have it, or else they will give it.

10. Then let me advise all those that do pine,
For fear that false jealousy shorten their time;
That disease will torment them worse than any plague. Then let all be contented, and wear the Bull's Feather.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXIX.

The Merry Goodfellow.

VV Hy should we not laugh and be jolly,
Since all the world now is grown mad?
And full'd in a dull melancholly;

He that wallows in sloze,
Is still gaping for more,
And that makes him as poor,
As the wretches that never any thing had.

2. How mad is that damn'd Money-monger,
That to purchase to him and his Heirs,
Gains shain'd with thirst and hunger;
While we that are bonny,
Buy back with ready-money,
And ne're trouble the Scribbener nor Lawyer.

3. These guts that by scraping and toylng,
To swell their Revenues so fast,
Get nothing by all their turmoiling,
But are marks of each Tax,
While they load their own backs
With the heaviest packs,
And lie down gall'd and weary at last.

4. While

The Loyal Garland.

4. While we that do traffick in tipple,
Can baffle the Colm and the Spindall,
Whose jaws are so hungry and gripple ;
We're trouble our Heads
With Indentures and Deeds,
And our Wills are compas'd in a word.

5. Our Money shall never invite us,
Nor drag us to Goldsmiths Hall,
No Pyrates nor wrecks can affright us ;
We that have no Estates
Fear no plunder nor rates,
We can sleep with open Gates,
That lies on the ground cannot fall.

6. We laugh at those Fools whose indeavours
Do but fit them for prisons and fines,
When we that spend all are the savers ;
For if thistles do break in,
They go out empty again,
Pay the plunderers loss their desigres.

7. Then let us not think on to morrow,
But tipple and laugh while we may,
To wash from our hearts all our sorrow ;
Those Complaintants which

Are

The Loyal Garland.

Are troubled with an itch,
To be mighty and rich,
Do but toil for the wealth which they borrow.

8. The Mayor of the Town with his Buff on,
What a pot is he better than we?
He must wait to the man with the Buff on;
Though he Custard may eat,
And such lubberly meat,
Yet our Sack makes us merrier than he.

SONG. LXXX.

The Levellers Rant.

To the Hall, to the Hall,
For Justice we call,
On the King and his pow'ful adherents and friends, (ends.
Who still hath endeavour'd, but we know their
Tis we will pull down what e're is above us,
And make them to fear us that never did love us.
We'll level the proud, and make every degree
To our Royalty bow the knee;
Tis no less than Treason,
Against freedom and Reason, for our Brethren to be higher than we.

The Loyall Garland.

First the thing call'd a King,
To judgment we bring,
And the spawn of the Court that were psonder than he,

And next the two Houses united shall be,
It does to the Romish Religion inbeagle,
For the state to be two-headed like a spread eagle.

Wee'l purge the superfluous Members away,
They are too many kings to sway:

And as we all teach
'Tis our Liberties breach,
For the Freeborn Saints to obey.

3. Not a claim in the Law
Shall keep us in awe ;
Wee'l have no Cushion-cuffers to tell us of hell,
For we are all gifted to do it as well :
The freedom we do hold sooth to the Nation,
To enjoy our fellow creatures as at the creation
Our carnal mens wives are for men of the spirit,
Our health is our own by merit,
For we that have right,
By the Law called Right,
Are the Saints that must judge and inherit.

SONG

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXXI.

A New Love-Song.

Take heed bold Lover, do not look Upon my Cloris eyes,
For every dart is tipped with death,
That from her glances flies.

Nor do not think to save thy self
From dangers or from harms;
By any vertues from her smiles,
Or with her secret charms.

Love hath commanded her to curse me,
None other heart but mine,
There is no hope that she can be
So merciful to thine.
For though her Eyes be uncharter'd
She has reserved for me
A Balsam in her Coral Lips
Gives perpetuity.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXXII.

A Song on going by Water.

Will you go by water Sir,
I am the sculler,
Fayre up Westward Sir,
There shall be no sculler :
Down Sir, west Wars,
Whither is it you go,
To Fox-Hall or Westminster,
Or through Bridge Bar ?
Water from the West,
Comes at a little higher,
You have a handsome woman by ye,
Which you may sit higher :
Say lay the stratcher,
Put it down to the bar,
Sir, will you change
A horse for a whale ?
Sculler look before you
With a pot to you, hold water :
Sir, look, the Moge runs foul on us,
Remember this hereafter.
Come Land us here at Kings-Bridge,
I Sir, if you are willing,
Here water-man here's six-pence,
Good faith 'tis worth a shilling.

SONG.

The Loyal Garland.

SONG. LXXXII

The merry Bells of Oxford

O the merry Christ-Church Bells,
One, Two, Three, Four, —
They trowl so merrily now,
The mounding sweet,
And they Chime so merrily, merrily,
Mark the First and Second Bell,
At e'ry day by Four and Ten,
Crys, come, come, come, come, come,
Prayers,
And the Wergers troop before the Damn
Tinkle, Tinkle, Tinkle, goes the little
To call in e'ry soul ;
But the devil a man,
Will leave his Can,
Till they hear the mighty Toul.

F I N I S.